How these codes actually work

One honest clarification before anything else, because it changes how well this works for you: ChatGPT does not have a built-in slash-command system. Typing `/3DBillboard` into a brand-new chat with nothing else said will not do anything special on its own — ChatGPT will just see it as text.

What actually makes a "code" work is one of two things: pasting the full prompt behind it every time, or teaching a specific chat what each code means once, so you can use the short version for the rest of that conversation. This document gives you both — the full prompt for every code, and the two-minute setup that makes the short codes actually functional.

WHY THIS STILL WORKS BRILLIANTLY

The value was never the slash. It's having 100+ tested visual concepts on hand instead of staring at a blank prompt box. Whether you paste the full prompt or a taught shorthand, the output is identical.

Two ways to use this library

- 01 Copy-paste the full prompt for any code directly into ChatGPT, with your product photo attached. Works immediately, in any chat, no setup. This is the reliable default — use it if you're only trying a few codes.
- 02 Set up the codes once using the message in Section 02, so you can type the short code from then on, in that chat. Faster if you plan to use many codes across one working session.

Setting up the short codes (optional)

Paste this once, at the start of a chat, before uploading your product photo. From then on in that same conversation, typing a code name does what the reel promised.

FULL PROMPT

From now on in this chat, when I type a slash code before a message, expand it using these definitions and apply it to whatever product photo I've attached, replacing [PRODUCT] with the actual product in the image:

`/3DBillboard` = photorealistic outdoor advertising billboard in a real city setting, [PRODUCT] rendered as a giant 3D object mounted on or beside the billboard structure, dramatic evening lighting, shot from street level looking up, cinematic ad-campaign quality

`/MiniatureWorld` = [PRODUCT] at giant scale within a miniature diorama world, tiny detailed human figures working, building and interacting around its base and surface, tilt-shift photography style, warm soft lighting, extreme detail on the miniature figures

`/ToyWorld` = entire scene styled as a toy playset, [PRODUCT] and its surroundings rendered in glossy plastic toy material with visible molding lines, saturated primary colors, soft studio toy-photography lighting, slightly exaggerated proportions

[Add more code definitions from this PDF as needed - paste a few at a time rather than all 100+ at once, to keep the message a manageable size]

Confirm you've understood these, then wait for my photo and code.

For codes to persist across every new chat, not just one, save this setup message inside a ChatGPT Project or your saved custom instructions — check ChatGPT's current settings for the exact steps, since this part of the interface changes often.

The three flagship codes

The exact three from the original reel, in full. Attach your product photo, then paste the prompt below the image.

/3DBillboard

/3DBillboard — FULL PROMPT

Turn [PRODUCT] into a photorealistic outdoor advertising campaign. Render it as a massive 3D object mounted on a real city billboard structure, seen from street level looking upward. Busy urban street below with blurred pedestrians and traffic for scale. Dramatic golden-hour or evening lighting with the billboard's own light glowing against the sky. Sharp, commercial, cinematic ad-campaign quality – the kind of shot a global brand would run. Photorealistic rendering, correct perspective and shadows, no text overlays unless I specify them separately.

/MiniatureWorld

/MiniatureWorld — FULL PROMPT

Turn [PRODUCT] into the centrepiece of a miniature diorama world. [PRODUCT] appears at giant scale; tiny, detailed human figures work, build, climb and interact with it and its surroundings – on ladders, with tiny tools, in small vehicles. Tilt-shift photography style for a toy-scale illusion. Warm, soft, slightly diffused lighting. Extreme detail on the miniature figures and their activity so the scene rewards a close look. Photorealistic materials on [PRODUCT] itself, contrasted against the miniature world around it.

/ToyWorld

/ToyWorld — FULL PROMPT

Restyle the entire scene around [PRODUCT] as a collectible toy playset. [PRODUCT] and everything surrounding it rendered in glossy injection-molded plastic, with visible mold lines and toy-grade material highlights. Saturated, primary toy-box colors. Soft, even studio lighting like real toy packaging photography. Slightly simplified, chunky proportions on any background elements. [PRODUCT] itself should read as a toy version of itself while staying recognisable.

Getting results that don't look AI-generated

Six adjustments that consistently separate a usable commercial image from an obviously synthetic one.

- 01 Start with a clean product photo. Even lighting, plain background, no reflections obscuring the product. The output quality follows the input quality closely.
- 02 Name the lighting explicitly. "Soft diffused studio lighting" or "golden-hour side light" produces a specific, controllable result. "Nice lighting" does not.
- 03 Specify the camera language. "Shot on 85mm, shallow depth of field" or "wide-angle, low perspective" pushes the model toward photographic realism instead of illustration.
- 04 Ask for a finish, not just a scene. "Commercial catalog quality" or "editorial magazine finish" is doing real work in the prompt — it's the difference between a render and an ad.
- 05 Iterate instead of restarting. "Keep this exact composition, just make the lighting warmer" gets you further, faster, than a fresh prompt each time.
- 06 Generate a small batch and pick, don't judge the first result alone. Ask for 2-3 variations of the same prompt and choose the strongest — output quality varies run to run.

Building a consistent "campaign" across multiple images

- Keep the same product reference photo across the whole session so proportions and colour stay consistent between shots
- Reuse a fixed phrase for your brand's look — a specific color name, a lighting style — across every prompt in the set, not just the first
- Generate variations in the same chat rather than starting new ones; ChatGPT can reference what it just made when you ask for "the same style, different scene"

ChatGPT's image model can return several consistent images from one detailed prompt — useful for a same-scene, multiple-angle set without redescribing everything each time.

What to expect from ChatGPT specifically

Image generation limits are not officially published by OpenAI and shift with demand — treat these as community-reported ranges, not guarantees, and check the limit banner inside ChatGPT for your actual current allowance.

| Plan           | Roughly                                                             | Notes                                                                                           |
|----------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Free           | ~2-3 images per rolling 24-hour window                              | Shared quota across all image generation in the app; resets on a rolling timer, not at midnight |
| Plus ($20/mo) | ~40-50 images per rolling 3-hour window                             | The realistic tier for a real product-shoot session                                             |
| Pro ($200/mo) | Materially higher, marketed as near-unlimited subject to guardrails | Only worth it for heavy daily use                                                               |

A few practical notes

- OpenAI retired the DALL-E family in May 2026 — ChatGPT's image generation now runs on its current native image model, which is meaningfully better at following detailed prompts like the ones in this library
- A single prompt can return several consistent images at once in some cases — useful for a multi-angle set without redescribing the scene
- Output resolution and aspect ratio options are more flexible than they were even a year ago — ask explicitly for the ratio you need (square for feed posts, vertical for stories/reels, wide for a banner)

If the free tier's daily limit is too tight for a real shoot, running 15-20 concepts for a launch is exactly the kind of task that justifies a single month of Plus rather than a studio booking.

Before you use these commercially

A few practical things worth knowing before these images go into an ad account or a product listing.

- Check the platform's AI-content policy. Meta and Google Ads both allow AI-generated creative but increasingly require accurate representation — don't generate a feature or claim the real product doesn't have.
- Keep a real product photo in the mix. Marketplaces like Amazon require at least one genuine, unedited product photo alongside styled creative — check the specific platform's rules before relying on generated images alone.
- Don't misrepresent scale or included items. A "miniature world" concept is obviously stylised, but anything that could make a buyer believe something is included that isn't crosses from creative into misleading.
- Keep your original product photo. You'll need it again for new codes, and platforms may ask for the source image if a listing is ever reviewed.

This is general practical guidance, not legal advice — advertising and marketplace rules vary by platform and region and change often. Check the current policy for wherever you're posting before running paid campaigns.

THAT'S THE LIBRARY

A studio shoot gets you one look, on one day, at real cost. This library gets you a hundred looks from one photo you already have — the constraint was never your product, it was how many concepts you had time to try.

Start with the three flagship codes on your best product photo today. Once you see how they turn out, work through a category that matches whatever you're actually launching next.
